GROWING MENACE OF TERRORISM

With the recent terrorist attack on Paris by ISIS (Islamic State of Iraq and Syria), the dangers of extremism have come to the forefront. The European countries, until now were considered relatively safe from these terror attacks. The realisation has set in that violence and instability in any one part of world can be dangerous for everybody.

A basic question that comes to mind is "why would young people join such organisation and execute heinous crimes?" The perpetrators of Paris attacks were all in the age group of 17 to 25 years. Apart from the obvious political and religious reasons, what could push a young person to be part of such terrorist activities? Many experts say the allure of adventure (real guns, war planes), easy money, broken families, and extreme poverty may be other triggers for this kind of behaviour. The countries of the world will have to come together to face this challenge. But the first thing to do perhaps is to clean one's own backyards and prevent teenagers and youngsters from joining these organisations. What is your take on it? Do send us your views on
